With an array of new privacy laws (such as the Colorado Privacy Act) across the globe, organisations are evaluating their applicability, and thereafter, their state of readiness for compliance. Notwithstanding the nature and extent of the applicability of privacy laws to a business, it is imperative for organisations to raise their 'risk mitigation' bar to protect sensitive and privileged information and mitigate the financial, reputation and legal implications of data breaches and theft. Identification of the information that is at risk and creation of data maps, amongst a maze of complex data flows and a wide ambit of rights of data subjects is, inextricably and essentially, not only challenging but also a bare necessity in the process.
